Fears of Unionists T.U. Congress Declares of South & West

Should They be Asked to Run Away from Their Customers?

Unionists in the South and West of Ireland sion. have not besitested to state that they have Ulster followers, as a result of the decision in Belfast on Wednesday to accept the printiple of Home Bule coupled with partition-They make no secret of their views in de claring that the pass has been sold.

The decision reached showed, said one of them, a peculiar lack of confidence in the principles and conditions upon which oil Unionist opposition to any form of Home Rute is based. The position of the "boyalists" in the South and West of Iroland, it was pointed out, had always been one of the main plants in Ulster's opposition to Home Bule. According to the doctrino prosched in that pravince life in the South and West would be intelerable for Protestants and Unioni tunder a Parliament in Dublin: * but they boasted that the residents of the North-East corner would look after themselves. Their great concern was the direct protection required for their reattered brethren in the SHOT IN THE BACK TRAGIC HOTEL SCENE South which would be afforded by the Lin perial Parliament, though many Southern of political action carried. Unionists ridiculed any fears of persecution because of religion or politics from their Nationalist fellow-countrymen. Will Not Accept.

BREAD IS DEAR-THANKS TO BRITISH MISGOVERNMENT.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The Government, when the proposed withdrawal of the bread subsidy becomes an accomplished fact, will have put a worthy apex to the monument of muddling which they have already reared. One thing after another has been so badly done, or left undone, by people in high places, to make the cost of living daily dearer, that the people might be thought to have no voice in the matter. Already there are indications that the people have a voice, and on one hand is heard alarm and on the other the demands of Naturally, official efforts to soothe are prompt. Mr. McCurdy, in his reply to Lieut.-Colonel Assheton-Prownall, very ingenuously expresses the opinion that the quartern loaf will in many places be IId. or even less.

He also assumes that the rise in the price of flour and bread will leave the cost of other commodities unchanged. But even in the absence of a sympathetic increase in the price of other commodities—a comfortless reservation—he makes a bland acknowledgment that the cost of living will have risen six points.

Story of Craddock's Fight with Von Spee

THE FALKLANDS REVENGE

The first volume of the official history of navel operations in the war, compiled by Six Julian 8. Corbett, is published by Longmans, Green, and Co., based upon official documents and written in collaboration with the Historical Section of the Commilten of Innecial Desence, the volume, which is the first instalment of a completed work of four or possibly five volumes, curries the story of naval operations from the test mobilication, which by account or design to greatly harressed British neval resultnews, to the battle of the Falklands in Docembar, 1915.

Of the director of Coronel, when Admiral Cradock, overwhelmed by the superior squadron of Von Spee, perished in the Good Hope, and the Monstouth, essinged and helpless, was driven to the hollom. Sir Julian tays that the main action lasted little more than an hour. The Corman shipe, lost me the obscurity of the castern horizon, were shinest invisible to Admiral Gradock's squadron, which, silhouetted against the after-give on the western herizon, offered a well-defined target. The flag-ship Good Hope was on fire aimest from the commence-ment of the hettle, and her end came within a hour, when 'the gloom was rent with an immense explosion where the Good Hep-was disaly burning. Is took her smidships: her forepart gave out, and a hugo sheet of flame rising two hundred feet high; her firing censed, but what booked like her afterpart could be faintly seen in the glow of flames which occasionally rose one of it."

Escape Only Possibility. When the flag-ship had gone escape was the only possibility. But the Moumouth, hadly mauled, was by sheer if-luck sighted by the Nuraberg. The Monmouth had "a list of ten degrees to part, and steam was occuping dangerously amidships. As the Numberg approached for the list increased, so much that she could not use her port guas, and the Germans could open fire on her with impunity at close range. The Numbers coased firing for several injustes to let her surrender, but in the Monagonth there was
