

LANKETS CLEANED,
STOVED,
REFINED
Wool Raised & Return'd
NEW PRESCOTT'S
DYE WORKS,
TALBOT STREET, DUBLIN

EDITORIAL
TELEGRAMS
104
HERALD,
DUBLIN.

EVENING HERALD

VOL. 29

NO. 278.

DUBLIN, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1920.

PRICE THREE HALFPENCE.

£1 TO £1,000
ADVANCED ON DEMAND AT
KELLY'S MONEY OFFICE
48 FLEET STREET
WESTMORELAND ST., DUBLIN, on Deposit of Silver, Old Sheffield Plate, Glass, Pictures, and every variety of Chattel Property. Full value remitted on receipt of goods from all parts.

Latest Stories About Irish Tragedies

FOURTEEN DEAD

Sunday Morning Sensations in Dublin

SIMULTANEOUS RAIDS

A Fierce Running Fight in Mount Street

Not since Easter Week 1916—and probably not even then did one single day furnish a parallel—has Dublin been the scene of such sensational happenings as were enacted yesterday.

The great tragedy commenced about 9 o'clock in the morning, when simultaneous raids were made by civilians on many houses in various parts of the city in which army officers and ex-officers resided. Eleven of the occupants were shot dead and five wounded, whilst two members of the Auxiliary Police Division were killed in street fight into which one of the raids developed.

Tremendous military activity followed, and many places were searched by military, R.I.C., and Auxiliaries.

CROWN CASUALTIES.

The following is the list of casualties in the morning shootings—
DEAD.
Capt. L. McLean,
Capt. Newbury,
Capt. Bagamy,
Capt. McCormick,
Capt. Mc Cormack,
Lieut. Murray,
Capt. Price,
Capt. Aimes,
Capt. Barrett,
Lieut. Johnson,
Mr. L. A. Hilde,
... J. H. Smith,
Capt. Gammie,
Capt. Morris,

WOUNDED.
Col. Woodcock,
Col. Montgomery,
Capt. Kerseide,
Lieut. Murray,
Capt. Price,
Capt. Aimes,
Capt. Barrett,
Lieut. Johnson,
Mr. L. A. Hilde,
... J. H. Smith,
Capt. Gammie,
Capt. Morris,

EYE-WITNESSES' STORIES

The following is a graphic description of their retreat with cool and deliberate firing until they reached a large gate in one of the yards. The gate and the wicket were forced, but the men shattered the lock and burst through the wicket. They made their way through the maze of lanes at the back and came out at the top of the street.

Here they encountered a couple of opponents, who whipped round to intercept them, but before they could open fire the fugitives shot at them and they fell dead.

Their names, it is said, are Cadet Captain and Capt. Morris.

RUNNING ON.

The residence of Mrs. Gray at 28 Upper Pembroke street was raided by about 20 men, some of whom came on bicycles. Two officers were shot dead and four wounded. The house contains several flats.

MAID HELD UP.

The raiders, armed and undiscerned, held up a maid on the stairs, and Mrs. Gray, the proprietress, who was leaving her room.

The house appeared to be full of them, and they broke up into parties and went to various parts of the premises.

Ten or 12 shots were heard, and, following these, the visitors decamped.

Mrs. Gray and her maid visited the rooms immediately, and found that Major Dowling, Grenadier Guards, had been shot dead at his bedroom door.

Captain Kenyside, Lancashire Fusiliers, whose wife most gallantly struggled with the raiders, and thereby frustrated their purpose, was wounded in the arm.

Colonel Woodcock was fired at as he came downstairs.

He could hear firing also in the house, and coming to the stairs, over-looking the room where two other maid-servants were standing.

When near the door he turned again, and, leveling his revolver, fired 3 or 4 shots at Mr. Mc Mahon.

All the shots took effect, and Mr. Mc Mahon partly lifted himself out of the bed, clutching his revolver, and lay down again, and, leveling his revolver, fired 3 or 4 shots at Mr. Mc Mahon.

Another attempt was made to force the door, but a heavy object was against it, and the raiders withdrew.

While this was going on, another party of the intruders were attempting to enter the next room. The door was evidently locked, and resisted the attempts to open it.

When the shots had been fired in the back room, the men trying to force the door stood back a few paces on the landing and fired a volley of shots at the lock of the door, which was practically blown away.

Another attempt was made to force the door, but a heavy object was against it, and the raiders withdrew.

Eventually the retreating men got into Grattan St. and away. One of the fugitives appeared to be wounded in the foot, and ran across the street to the house of a man named Katherine Farrell, who unwillingly pointed out the room occupied by Lieut. Aimes, of the Grenadier Guards, and Lieut. Bennett, of the R.A.S.C. Motor Transport.

The maid then rushed upstairs, and told an officer who was sleeping on an upper floor, and another male lodger what was happening downstairs.

A INNATE OF SHOTS.

When the two men came downstairs they found two bodies in pools of blood in Aimes's bedroom.

Bennett was evidently dragged from the bedroom in bedclothes into his brother officer's room, where both were shot together, their bodies lying side by side.

HOTEL VISITED.

At the Gresham Hotel, O'Connell Street, a party of 15 to 20 men entered the open door of the hotel, held up the hosts and head porter by revolvers, and forced the latter, Hugh Callaghan, to lead them to the rooms occupied by ex-Captain Park McCormack, Army Veterinary Corps; and Lieut. J. E. Wilde.

Wilde opened the door and said: "What do you want?"

IN ANSWER THREE SHOTS WERE FIRED

into his chest simultaneously.

The party then moved to Room 21, and on entering found McCormack sitting up in bed reading a paper.

WITHOUT A WORD FIRE SHOTS WERE FIRED

into his body and head as he sat there.

The bed was saturated with blood,

and the body, especially the head, was horribly disfigured.

At 19 Lr. Baggott St. the raid was carried out.

As one of them climbed the wall

he was hit in the back by a couple of men, and he fell into the garden of No. 22, and he was badly injured, for he did not move until he was taken away later by the military.

Continuing the fight, the raiders covered

CASTLE VERSION

Yesterday's Shootings In Dublin

HEAVY LIST

Details of Incidents in Victims' Houses

An official account of the shooting of British officers in Dublin yesterday was issued by the Irish Office to-day.

Describing the shooting of Capt. Newbury, court martial officer, who lived with his wife at 92 Lower Baggott street, Dublin, the account states that a party of raiders numbering a dozen were let in by the landlady, Mrs. Slack.

The men asked for Captain Newbury, and on seeing the crowd the landlady rushed upstairs in terror, and saw nothing of the subsequent happenings.

The men knocked at Capt. Newbury's door. Mrs. Newbury opened it, and seeing a crowd of armed men, slammed the door in their faces and locked it. The men burst open the door, but Mr. and Mrs. Newbury escaped to an inner room to get safety.

Captain Newbury and his wife tried to hold the door against the intruders.

SHOT THROUGH THE DOOR.

They had almost succeeded in shutting it when a man fired through the door, wounding Capt. Newbury, who, though spitting blood, got to the window, flung it open, and was half-way out when the men burst into the room.

Mrs. Newbury flung herself in their way, but they pushed her aside and fired seven shots into Captain Newbury's body.

The police found the body lying halfway out of the window covered with a blanket which Mrs. Newbury, though prostrate, had placed over it.

The woman's resolution and her subsequent grief strongly affected the police party.

It was significant that the raiders in this case as in two or three others, made a diligent search for papers, hoping perhaps to find abstract documents or evidence on which the military law offices were working.

The residence of Mrs. Gray at 28 Upper Pembroke street was raided by about 20 men, some of whom came on bicycles. Two officers were shot dead and four wounded.

The house contains several flats.

MAID HELD UP.

The raiders, armed and undiscerned, held up a maid on the stairs, and Mrs. Gray, the proprietress, who was leaving her room.

The house appeared to be full of them, and they broke up into parties and went to various parts of the premises.

Ten or 12 shots were heard, and, following these, the visitors decamped.

Mrs. Gray and her maid visited the rooms immediately, and found that Major Dowling, Grenadier Guards, had been shot dead at his bedroom door.

Captain Kenyside, Lancashire Fusiliers, whose wife most gallantly struggled with the raiders, and thereby frustrated their purpose, was wounded in the arm.

Colonel Woodcock was fired at as he came downstairs.

He could hear firing also in the house, and coming to the stairs, over-looking the room where two other maid-servants were standing.

When near the door he turned again, and, leveling his revolver, fired 3 or 4 shots at Mr. Mc Mahon.

All the shots took effect, and Mr. Mc Mahon partly lifted himself out of the bed, clutching his revolver, and lay down again, and, leveling his revolver, fired 3 or 4 shots at Mr. Mc Mahon.

Another attempt was made to force the door, but a heavy object was against it, and the raiders withdrew.

While this was going on, another party of the intruders were attempting to enter the next room. The door was evidently locked, and resisted the attempts to open it.

When the shots had been fired in the back room, the men trying to force the door stood back a few paces on the landing and fired a volley of shots at the lock of the door, which was practically blown away.

Another attempt was made to force the door, but a heavy object was against it, and the raiders withdrew.

Eventually the retreating men got into Grattan St. and away. One of the fugitives appeared to be wounded in the foot, and ran across the street to the house of a man named Katherine Farrell, who unwillingly pointed out the room occupied by Lieut. Aimes, of the Grenadier Guards, and Lieut. Bennett, of the R.A.S.C. Motor Transport.

The maid then rushed upstairs, and told an officer who was sleeping on an upper floor, and another male lodger what was happening downstairs.

A innate of shots was heard.

A lady resident in the house went from room to room seeking help, and in every room found only dead, dying, or wounded men.

One of the raiders, who was retreating, shot the maid, and she died.

He then went to Grattan St. in pursuit, but could not locate the raiders.

They went into Grattan St. in pursuit, but could not locate the raiders.

An ex-army officer who also witnessed the battle in the street, and had seen some hot passages in France, but while it lasted in Mount St. such a strikingly daring and audacious stand-up fight he had never seen.

One of the men, who carried a huge hammer, knocked at the first room, No. 14, occupied by Wilde.

Wilde opened the door and said: "What do you want?"

In answer three shots were fired

into his chest simultaneously.

The party then moved to Room 21, and on entering found McCormack sitting up in bed reading a paper.

Without a word fire shots were fired

into his body and head as he sat there.

The bed was saturated with blood,

and the body, especially the head, was horribly disfigured.

At 19 Lr. Baggott St. the raid was carried out.

As one of them climbed the wall

he was hit in the back by a couple of men, and he fell into the garden of No. 22, and he was badly injured, for he did not move until he was taken away later by the military.

Continuing the fight, the raiders covered

DEADLY HAIL

Thousands of Football Spectators Under Fire

TWELVE KILLED

Indescribable Scenes of Panic at Croke Park

Scenes of horror, which will never be forgotten by those witnessing them, took place at Croke Park yesterday during the progress of a challenge match between teams representing Dublin and Tipperary.

Shortly after the start the spectators were startled by the sound of rifle shots, and a panic ensued—men, women, and children stampeding wildly in an effort to get out of the ground.

Pathetic scenes were witnessed to-day at the Mater and Jervis street hospitals, where the majority of the victims were brought in crowds collecting for the purpose of gleanings information regarding the dead and wounded, and others with a view to tracing missing relatives or friends.

Pathetic scenes were witnessed to-day at the Mater and Jervis street hospitals, where the majority of the victims were brought in crowds collecting for the purpose of gleanings information regarding the dead and wounded, and others with a view to tracing missing relatives or friends.

Women weep

Pothetic Scenes at Hospitals To-day

Coroner Not Communicated With by Authorities

The City Coroner, Dr. Louis A. Byrne, seen by an "Evening Herald" representative to-day, said he had received no intimation from the authorities with reference to the series of tragedies in the city yesterday.

This may be taken to indicate that no inquest will be held. It is not yet known whether military inquiries will be held.

Women wept bitterly, and the male visitors appeared greatly moved and depressed.

It now transpires that numbers of people who have not been accounted for in the published reports were wounded in the battles at Croke Park, and were either taken to the Mater or Jervis street hospitals.

It appears that the deceased were brought to the Mater hospital, and were treated for their injuries.

Two hours later the Mater hospital was again visited by the "Evening Herald," and the deceased were found to be in a condition of semi-consciousness.

It is now known that the deceased were brought to the Mater hospital, and were treated for their injuries.

It is now known that the deceased were brought to the Mater hospital, and were treated for their injuries.

It is now known that the deceased were brought to the Mater hospital, and were treated for their injuries.

It is now known that the deceased were brought to the Mater hospital, and were treated for their injuries.